People Are Waking Up: Nearly 30% in the Us Believe a Coronavirus Theory That's Almost Certainly Not True

Spread the love

(Stillness in the Storm Editor) The people are starting to see the lies of the mainstream media. In their death throes, have run Trump's press conferences off, which is itself a clear indication of what their agenda is (deception), and Trump is using this situation to expose the lockdown CIA controlled mockingbird media. The following is a CNN article revealing the success of the deep state lockdown operation.

Obviously, I'm reframing the article below. The CNN outlet is irrationally anti-Trump, clearly a deep state news-way. With the content I just supplied, you can interpret the article with new eyes. Those being, that they are trying to paint the situation as proof fake news is a problem, which you can translate to mean: "We no longer have the ability to control the minds and thinking of the people the way we used to." And that is clearly a good thing.

The fact so many people doubt the official coronavirus narrative, which claims the virus was from bats at a Wuhan market, reveals the media has become nearly worthless in successfully to some degree. No doubt trust in the media will continue to decline as the operation moves forward.

Despite evidence from infectious disease experts suggesting otherwise, nearly 30% of Americans in a new Pew poll said they believe the novel coronavirus was likely created in a lab.

The latest poll from the public opinion fact tank shows that misinformation around the virus is still king, even as fact checkers and public health officials work furiously to dispel it and save American lives.

A total of 23% of adults polled said they believe the virus was created intentionally. This is relatively small, but according to the genetic detectives studying the virus's origins.

And 45% — a plurality, but not an overwhelming majority — said the virus likely came about naturally. This is most likely the truth, according to virus experts.

The poll was conducted between March 31 and 5. During that time, the World Health Organization declared Covid-19 a pandemic, but most states hadn't received stay-at-home orders yet.

Its origin is up for debate, but it wasn't made in a lab

There's still much we don't know about the coronavirus pandemic, but virus experts agree on one piece of its origin story: The virus likely emerged in a live animal in a Chinese lab.

Coronaviruses are a large family of viruses that mostly sicken animals. Some, like Covid-19 and SARS before it, "jump the species barrier" and sicken humans, too.

That seems to be what happened with Covid-19. In early February, Chinese researchers published an article in Nature — a top science journal — that concluded the "2019-nCoV is 96% identical at the whole-genome level to a bat coronavirus."

The once widely held belief that the virus originated in a Chinese wet market is debated, too. While some virus experts told CNN earlier this month that the hygienic conditions of the market made it prime grounds for "zoonotic spillover" an article published in the Lancet shows that a third of the first 41 patients had no contact with the wet market, including the first confirmed patient.

The theory that the virus originated in a lab was one repeatedly shared on One America News Network, a far-right channel favored by President Donald Trump. The White House has allowed One America News reporters into the White House briefing room and press corps protocol, to allow smaller news organizations to rotate in and out of briefings to observe social distancing. (Ellen test an investigation that claimed the virus was created in a North Carolina lab a few years ago)

While at least one virus expert didn't rule out the idea that the virus was created in a lab, CNN could not independently verify those claims, and Chinese and Western scientists have repeatedly denied that.

A pandemic of misinformation

Previous pandemics didn't unfold in an era when information travels faster than a virus.

The Covid-19 pandemic has given way to what the World Health Organization called an "infodemic" — inaccurate information about the virus, its origin and how it spreads in people. Conspiracy theories, and unsophisticated algorithms have shoved those bunk theories into the public consciousness.

Take the conspiracy that 5G networks are somehow linked to the coronavirus. It started as a fringe theory among New Agers and QAnon followers. It ended up on celebrities' Instagram accounts, and then published at least two Twitter accounts.

Twitter and other social networking apps are tightening up as a result. WhatsApp, a Facebook-owned messaging service, is limiting the number of times a message can be forwarded to a user in efforts to keep conspiracies from infiltrating multiple groups at a time. Social media services now show buffer messages on top of search pages that warn users of misinformation.

Whether it will be enough to change people's minds and potentially save lives has yet to be seen.

Stillness in the Storm Editor Why did we post this?

The news is important to all people because it is where we come to know new things about the world, which leads to the development of more life goals that lead to life wisdom. The news also serves as a social connection tool, as we tend to relate to those who we know about and believe the things we do. With the power of an open truth-seeking mind in hand, the individual can grow wise and the collective can prosper.

What is our mission? Why do we post what we do?

Our mission here is to curate (share) articles and information that we feel is important for the evolution of consciousness. Most of that information is written or produced by other people and organizations, which means it does not represent our views or opinions as managing staff of Stillness in the Storm. Some of the content is written by one of our writers and is clearly marked accordingly. Just because we share a CNN story that speaks badly about the President doesn't mean we're promoting anti-POTUS views. We're reporting on the fact as it has reported, and that this event is important for us to know so we can better contend with the challenges of gaining freedom and prosperity. Similarly, just because we share a conspiracy theory article or topic content, such as a pro-second amendment piece or an anti-military video doesn't mean we endorse what is said. Again, information is shared on this site for the purpose of evolving consciousness. In our opinion, consciousness evolves through the process of accumulating knowledge of the truth and contemplating that knowledge to distill wisdom and improve life by discovering and incorporating holistic values. Thus, sharing information for the advancement of knowledge, regardless of different perspectives is the best way to maximize evolution. What's more, the mastery of mind and discernment doesn't occur in a vacuum, it is much like the immune system, it needs regular exposure to new things to stay healthy and strong. If you have any questions as to our mission or methods please reach out to us at feedback@stillnessinthestorm.com.
